

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A convenient and apparently complete collection of Dryden's poems has been published by Frederick Warne & Co., under the name of "The Athlon Edition."

A. C. McClurg & Co. have issued a reprint of "The Compleat Angler," wholly revised in its spelling, and thus deprived of some quaintness that enhanced the pleasure of perusing it, but with a general introduction by Edward Gilpin Johnson.

A fancy that will perhaps please some readers has been embodied by Mary E. Hart in a volume bound in white, and named "Stray Violets" (George M. Allen Company), which contains a great variety of selections from poets who have written of these violets, accompanied by illustrations in colors.

It is sufficient testimony to the value of the learned parts of Murray's "Handbook for Japan" that the studies of the Shinto and Buddhist religions, the mythology and legends, and the glossaries, to remark that the work is edited by Professor Eadie Hall Chamberlain. The third edition contains fifteen maps, and two copies on Japanese paper of Japanese drawings of famous temples, the one Shintoish, the other Buddhist. The book has been for the most part rewritten. W. B. Mason, formerly of the Imperial Japanese Department of Communications, was associated with Professor Chamberlain in the editorship, and the two acknowledge the assistance of nearly every prominent foreign resident of Japan. Another book for tourists is Morris Phillips's "Abroad and at Home" (Brentano's), intended for those who travel in Great Britain, on the Continent or in the United States. It is worth mentioning that the preface of the book is written by ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall.

Rand, McNally & Co. have published an enlarged edition of their popular pocket atlas under the title "New Pocket Atlas."

"The London Daily Press" is a small book published by the Religious Tract Society in London and by Fleming H. Revell Company in New York. It gives a brief description of the various newspapers of the English capital, and is illustrated with views of publishing houses and portraits of well-known journalists.

In "A Dictionary of Botanical Terms," by A. A. Crozier, preference is given apparently to the orthography which most nearly represents the vowels of the original Greek words, for example, "dyaster" instead of "duster," and "clitostarp" instead of "clitostarp." In the latter case the shortened spelling is almost sure to lead to a mispronunciation. The dictionary also gives the preference to "sylva" over "silva." According to the preface, it is nearly twenty years since the publication of a similar work; there was, therefore, ample need for the present book. Space has been economized by the omission of obsolete terms, except such as occur in standard botanical works—a measure of doubtful economy, for if one dips into an old book and is graced by a dianed word, one will not be consold when the dictionary fails to satisfy his curiosity. The book is published by Henry Holt & Co.

"The Moslem World" is something unique in religious journalism. It is a journal devoted to the American Islamic propaganda and conducted by an American formerly in the United States consider service, who now calls himself Mohammed Alexander Russell Webb. Its function as cheerfully described by the Editor is not to attack any sect or religious system, nor to misrepresent any existing creed. Its spirit will be purely educational and its prime purpose will be "to place the religion taught by the inspired prophet of Arabs before the English-speaking world in its true light." The first number is attractive not only in its tolerant spirit, but also in literary style and in typography; and it contains a good illustration of the Cathedral Mosque at Agra. So much of the literature of the Mohammedan religion has never been translated into English that American readers may find much novelty in the pages of this journal, in which a large mass of historical, traditional and doctrinal information is to be brought to light. There is no reason why this new venture should not have a cheerful welcome. Christianity has been for a long time making ineffectual efforts to convert Moslems. Meanwhile there are a number of places in this city where Christianity does not seem to touch, and which would be wonderfully improved by an honest acceptance of almost any new religion. If our Moslem friends can get hold of these people and lead them to a genuine obedience to Moslem precepts, they will certainly be better than they are now.
